Several varieties known respectively as 'Eleven-penny,' 'Nine-penny,' 'Six-penny,' and 'Three-penny,' according to the number of pieces used. 'Eleven-penny' is played with eleven pieces each side, instead of nine. The players move alternately, and the general principle is to get three pieces together in a line anywhere on the dots or holes, while at the same time preventing your adversary from making a line. 'Nine-penny,' 'Six-penny,' and 'Three-penny' differ only in the number of men each side and the form of the board. The 'board' is scratched or chalked out on paving-stones, drawn on the slate, cut deep into the turf on the downs, or the top of the corn-bin (with holes instead of dots), in short, made anywhere and anyhow. The 'men' or 'pieces' may be anything available, sticks being played against stones, beans against oats, &c.

MANADGE, sb. Sc. n.Cy. Nhb. Dur. Also in forms manaudge N.Cy.[1] ; manawdge Lnk. ; menage Sc. [mənaˑdg, mənāˑdg.] 1. A kind of club or benefit society ; see below.

Sc. Every member pays in a fixed sum weekly, to be continued for a given term. At the commencement, the order of priority in receiving the sum collected, is determined by lot. He who draws No. 1 as his ticket receives into his hands the whole sum collected for the first week, on his finding security that he shall pay in his weekly share during the term agreed. He who draws No. 2 receives the contributions of all the members for the second week, and so on according to their order (JAM.). Ayr. There is a thing which has come into most uncommon vogue amongst us of late, that is, what is called the 'menage' system. . . A given number of people lay their heads together, and agree to contribute so much a week for a specified time ; the members settling among themselves by lot the order in which they are to receive the weekly slump sum. If there are say twenty in the menage, each contributing a shilling per week, the member who is fortunate in the drawing, gets a pound, less a small sum deducted for refreshment to the company, or for the benefit of the person in whose house the menage is held, JOHNSTON Kilmallie (1891) II. 130. Lnk. This kind of society is still common amongst the mill-girls in Bridgeton of Glasgow, the purpose gen. being to enable them one after another, to supply themselves with hats, MONTGOMERIE-FLEMING Notes (1899) ; Every Scottish housewife of the working-class order knows what a manawdge is, MURDOCH Readings (1895) I. 68. Dur. Poor widows in pit districts sometimes keep what is called a 'money ma-nadge' ; members pay in 1*s.* a fortnight, until 21*s.* has been paid in. They then receive 20*s.* out of it, the remaining 1*s.* going to the club woman for her trouble in taking care of the 20*s.* (F.P.)

Hence (1) Manawdge-circle, sb. the whole number of contributors to the 'manadge' ; (2) -wife, sb. the woman who collects and takes charge of the money paid into the 'manadge.'

(1) Lnk. 'Cleaner' in general for the whole district, and washer-wife for Mrs. Gruppy's manawdge-circle in particular, MURDOCH Readings (1895) I. 72. (2) Lnk. Mrs. Gruppy was a manawdge wife who had considerable experience in the business. She was a sort of accepted stair-head banker and chancellor of the local exchequer, ib. 69.

2. The method of selling goods, esp. drapery, on credit to be paid for in instalments. Also used attrib.

4. A term of abuse.

N.Cy.[1] Used among the lowest women of Newcastle.

5. ? Obs. The last handful of corn cut in harvest; see below. Cf. neck, sb.[2]

Shr., Hrt. The last blades of corn which the reapers tie together at the top to set up in the field to throw their sickles at. He who cuts the knot receives the prize, Hone Every-day Bk. (1826) II. 1163. Hrt. Chambers Bk. Days (1869) II. 378; The reapers tie together the tops of the last blades of corn which is mare, Brand Pop. Antiq. (1772) 308. [Daily Telegraph (Oct. 10, 1889) 5, col. 1.]

Hence crying the mare, phr., obsol., a harvest custom; see below. See Cry, 12 (18).

Ir. Still practised at harvest homes in some parts, Academy (Sept. 15, 1888). s.Chs.[1] Now quite obs. When the last field of corn on a farm had been cut, the labourers employed upon the farm collected together upon a piece of elevated ground, and proceeded to recite the following 'nominy':—'What hast thou gotten theer?' 'A mare.' 'Wheer wilt thou send her to?' 'To So and So's'—mentioning a neighbouring farmer, who had not been fortunate enough to get his harvest over so soon, and who might therefore be supposed to need the loan of the mare. Chs., Shr. 'Crying the mare' is quite a separate old custom from 'crying the neck,' and was as follows. The men employed on a farm who were the first to finish harvest in a neighbourhood got a full bottle of beer, and fixing it on the longest 'pitch-fork' or 'pikel' that could be found, stood on the highest ground on the farm, and raising the fork and bottle above their heads shouted a loud and resounding shout, so as to be heard at all the surrounding farms, thus indicating their triumph over their neighbours by being the first to finish harvest. All these old customs fell into disuse when machinery was introduced (M.L.). Shr.[2] When a farmer has ended his reaping and the wooden bottle is passing merrily round, the reapers form themselves into two bands and commence the following dialogue in loud shouts, or rather in a kind of chant. . . First band: 'I have her, I have her, I have her.' (Every sentence is repeated three times.) 'What hast thee?' . . . First, 'A mare.'. . Second, 'Whose is her?' . . . First, 'H. B's.' (naming their master, whose corn is all cut). Second, 'Where shall we send her?' &c. First, 'To C. D.' (naming some neighbour whose corn is still standing). And the whole concludes with a joyous shout of both bands united. In the South Eastern part . . . the ceremony is performed with a slight variation. The last few stalks of the wheat are left standing; all the reapers throw down their sickles, and he who cuts it off, cries 'I have her,' . . on which the rustic mirth begins. The latest farmer in the neighbourhood . . . is said 'to keep her all the winter.' It not unfrequently happens, that the farmer who has been presented with 'the mar' sends one of his harvest-men with a halter at supper time for her! . . . 'They cryden the mar awhile I was thire, becos yo sin we'den done harrast fust; 'e gotten up o'er neet and laid a dhel o' the wèät down i' swääths, un awhile we wun at supper a mon cumm'd in wie a autar to fatch her away.' Hrf. The last few ears of corn are left standing, tied together at the top, and the workmen throw their sickles at it, and he that cuts the knot has the prize, and cries 'I have her.' 'What have you?' 'A mare.' 'Whose is she?' 'B.' (naming the owner three times). 'Whither will you send her?' 'To John a Nokes' (naming some neighbour whose corn is not all reaped), Blount (1681); Horae Subsecivae 1777 266. Hrt. Bailey 1721.

Sc. If a soldier passed without saluting the chaplain, he had an hour's ride on the wooden mare for his pains, Scott Leg. Mont. (1818) xiv. Abd. 2. A division of land varying in extent; also in comp. Mark-land.

Sc. The common burdens were laid on, not according to the retour or merk land, but the valuation of the rents, Baillie Lett. (1775) I. 370 (Jam.). Sh.I. The lands are understood to be divided into merks. A merk of land, however, does not consist uniformly of a certain area. In some instances, a merk may be less than an acre; in others, perhaps, equal to two acres. Every merk again consists of so much arable ground, and of another part which is only fit for pasturage. . . Several of these merks, sometimes more, sometimes fewer, form a town, Statist. Acc. V. 195, note (ib.); The markland in Shetland was of varying extent. In Delting the mark is estimated as 0·7 acre; at Lerwick a mark is not nearly a Scottish acre; at Unst a mark might be less than one or equal to two. In Dunrossness a merkland 'ought to contain 1600 square fathoms'; at Fetlar a mark is estimated at half an acre; in North Yell a quarter acre, Sh. News (Apr. 30, 1898); The ancient valuation was disused and the skat assessed on the marks in the pennyland. . . From the analogy of the Orkneys an average mark would be the fourth part of a pennyland, and as a 'last' of land contained eighteen marks, a last was 4½*d.* land, i.e. the fourth part of an ounceland. A markland was divided into eight ores, or ounces. . . The mark of land was the unit, for . . . yearly rent, ib. Or.I. He laid a heavier ratement on the fractions of every markland, then on the markland itself, Wallace Desc. Or. I. (1693) 237, ed. 1883; These penny-lands are again divisible into smaller denominations of merks or merk-lands, farthing-lands, and cows-worths, Peterkin Notes (1822) 6; Nae less than twa marks o' laund. . . Twa marks o' laund; that wad keep twa coos, an' twa mares an' twa rools, Fergusson Rambles (1884) 162. Inv. Slait is thirty merkland, Maidment Spottiswoode Miscell. (1844–5) II. 355. Arg. The denomination of mark lands still holds in common speech, and in general one mark-land may give full employ to one plough and one family in the more arable parts of the county, Agric. Surv. 33 (Jam.). Fif., Slg. N. & Q. (1853) 1st S. vii. 618. Rnf. Y^r^ is ane second feu contract of ane merkland of ye said lands, Hector Judic. Records (1876) 303.

Hence (1) Mark-merkland, sb. a division of land varying from one to three acres; (2) -stones, sb. pl. stones used to define the limits of a 'mark' of land.

(1) S. & Ork.[1] (2) Sh.I. [The mark's] exact limits being described by loose stones or shells under the name of merk-stanes, Hibbert Desc. Sh. I. (1822) 35, ed. 1891.

3. Obs. A nominal weight. Also in comp. Mark-weight.

Sh.I. Eight pieces of this description of cloth [wadmel], each measuring six ells, constituted a mark. (In the seventeenth century, however, the name of a mark of wadmel became entirely obsolete owing to the custom introduced of converting it into money. . . . The eighth part of a mark of this coarse cloth then acquired the name of a shilling of wadmel), Hibbert Desc. Sh. I. (1822) 35, ed. 1891; A newer standard of comparison had succeeded to the wadmel, formed of a certain weight of some inferior metal. The division, therefore, of a mark-weight of this substance into eight ures or ounces appears to have suggested a name for the same number of portions into which a mark of land began to be resolved, ib.; Sixpenny land pays to the proprietor 8 merks butter, Statist. Acc. VII. 580 (Jam.). Or.I. 24 merks make one setting, nearly equal to 1 stone 5 lib. Dutch, ib. 477; The least quantity is called a merk (which will be eighteen ounce). Twenty-four merk makes a liespound or setten, Wallace Desc. Or. I. (1693) 41, ed. 1883; The malt, meill, and beare are delivered in Orknay be wecht. . . 24 marks makis an setting, Skene Difficill Wds. (1681) 130; S. & Ork.[1]

[1, 3. By this gaude have I wonne . . . An hundred mark, Chaucer C.T. c. 390. OFr. marc, 'quantité' d'or, d'argent pesant un 'marc' (huit onces) (Hatzfeld); MLG. mark, '(Geld)-gewicht, ein halbes Pfund' (Schiller-Lübben).]

MARK, sb.[3] Dur. Yks. Lin. Dev. 1. In comb. (1) Mark('s e'en, or St. Mark's eve, the eve of St. Mark's day, see below; (2) Mark, Luke, and John, a four-post bed of which one leg is broken or gone.

(1) Dur. 'What for should you die any more than me myself?' 'Because I've had my warning! I've had plain proof I shall. . . I seed my own waft go into the kirk last St. Mark's eve, and it never cam' out no more, Longman's Mag. (July 1897) 252. n.Yks. The custom of observing Mark's-e'en . . . by watching in the church porch, Simpson Jeanie o' Biggersdale (1893) 221; n.Yks.[1] Perhaps scarcely extinct even yet. The watch in the church-porch, for the purpose of ascertaining who among the parishioners is to be carried to his long home in the churchyard during the ensuing year, is still spoken of as matter of recollection, if not of these days' practice. The duly gifted watcher, according to some, would see all his fellow-inhabitants proceed into the church, and defile thence again in long procession, leaving only such behind them as were auned to death before another Mark's-e'en: according to others, the procession into the church would be formed only of the shapes of the doomed ones, who pass into the church, but do not return thence. Another form of the notion is, to watch by a window which commands the church-road, when the figures of those who are to die within the year will be seen to pass as if 'boun for cho'ch.' Should the watcher, however, fall asleep at the mystic hour of vision (midnight) he is himself among those whose death is auned; n.Yks.[4] e.Yks. The apparitions of those who shall die in the ensuing year, are seen to walk to the church where they shall be buried: certain persons, 'watching the kirk' to know the fate of their fellow parishioners. If the watcher go to sleep at the critical moment he himself is doomed to die within the year, Marshall Rur. Econ. (1796) II. 332. Lin. In the year 1634, two men . . . agreed betwixt themselves upon St. Marke's Eve at night, to watch in the church porch at Burton to try whether or noe . . . they should see the spectras or phantomes of those persones which should die in that parish the yeare following, Edb. Antiq. Mag. (1848) 82. (2) e.Dev. Old Betty was under her 'Mark, Luke, and John,' Blackmore Perlycross (1894) xii.

MARNULL, sb. Dor. Also in form marnhill. A game, see below. Cf. merrils.

A carter's lads' game, played with 9 white and 9 black stones, or pieces of chalk and coal. The game is to make a line of Three. When any player has done this he is at liberty to take off the board one of his opponent's men. This goes on till only 3 of one colour are left. Then the men (or stones) can jump to any vacant corner, and try to form another row of Three. When this is done the game is over, and the player who has most men left on the board wins (C.J.F.); Out on the downs, &c., at odd times they cut a 'board' in the turf and have a game al fresco. I have never seen the game played, but I have once or twice seen the figure in question cut in the turf and wondered what it could be. Marnull is the name of a village in the north of Dorset (H.J.M.).

MAYOR, sb. Cor. In phr. (1) like the Mayor of Calenich; (2) — of Falmouth, (3) — of Market-Jew, see below.

(1) Calenich is one mile from Truro, and the mayor's hackney was pastured two miles from home; so, as his worship would by no means compromise his dignity by walking to Truro, he invariably walked to his horse to ride there, so that it was said of any one who would keep up appearances at great trouble, that he was 'like the Mayor of Calenich, who walked two miles to ride one,' HUNT Pop. Rom. w.Eng. (1865) 424, ed. 1896. (2) The stupid man whose moods, whether of sadness or merriment, are inopportune, is . . . said to be 'like the Mayor of Falmouth, who thanked God when the town-jail was enlarged,' ib.; The brewer of Market-Jew was also mayor. . . It was his practice, when any of the townspeople came before him, begging him to settle their disputes, . . to shut them up in the brewery-yard, give them as much beer as they could drink, and keep them there until they became good friends. Owing to this practice he seldom had enough beer to sell, and was frequently troubled to pay for his barley. This . . . gave rise . . . to the proverb still in daily use, 'Standing, like the Mayor of Market-Jew, in his own light,' ib. 68-9; The class who never know on which side their bread is buttered, are said to be 'like the Mayor of Market-Jew, sitting in their own light,' ib. 424.

MEAS(E, sb. Sc. I.Ma. Dev. Cor. Also written mese Sc.; and in forms mais Sc. (Jam. Suppl.); maise Sc. (Jam. Suppl.) I.Ma.; maize nw.Dev.[1]; maze Sc. (Jam.) I.Ma. n.Dev. [mīz, mēz.] A measure used in counting herrings of varying quantities; see below.

Sc. The number is five hundred, but . . . they are 'long hundreds': hence a mais of herrings is 600 herrings (Jam. Suppl.); Mese of herring conteins five hundredth, for the common use of numeration, and telling of herring, Skene Difficill Wds. (1681) 87; The supply of fresh herrings . . . was uncommonly large; twelve boats, some of them having nearly forty maze (a maze is five hundred) having arrived in the morning, Caled. Merc. (July 24, 1815) (Jam.). I.Ma. The mode of reckoning is by scores, of which six score form the hundred and five hundred the 'meaish' (Gaelic), mease, or maze, as spelt in some old Manx statutes, by which term they are sold, consisting of 620 herrings, N. & Q. (1874) 5th S. ii. 417; Dan . . . shook the herrings into the hold. 'Five maze at least,' said Quilleash, Caine Deemster (1887) 66, ed. 1889; His outstretched arm, at the end whereof was a herring. . . 'Ten maise of this sort for the last lot,' ib. Manxman (1894) pt. iv. vii. n.Dev. At Clovelly, Bucks, Bideford, Ilfracombe, and as far as Lynton, herrings are sold by the 'maze' or 'meas' of 612 fish. This number is arrived at in the following way:—the herrings are counted by the handful of three fish, called a 'cast,' and thus when 40 casts have been counted, 120 fish have been reckoned, equal to a 'long hundred'; 10 more 'casts' are counted, and the number reached by the addition of these thirty more fish is 150. Then the fisherman calls out 'cast' and throws in another cast, completing the number to 153 fish. This process repeated four times gives the number of 612 fish, . . and makes up the maze or meas, N. & Q. (1874) 5th S. ii. 167; Large quantities of herrings have been caught at Clovelly. One fisherman, James Small, brought in about twenty mease (mease, 600). The prices realised have fallen so low as 5*s.* per mease, W. Morning News (Nov. 23, 1895); Clovelly is celebrated for its herrings. The fishery is in the autumn, and the fish are sold by the maize, of 612 fish, Hand-bk. (ed. 1877) 67. nw.Dev.[1] Cor.[2] 505 herrings.

[A mayse of herynge, allistrigium, Cath. Angl. (1483). ON. meiss, a wooden box, a basket used for packing herrings, hence meisa síld, barrel-herrings (Vigfusson); MLG. mese, meise, 'ein Mass für trockene Sachen' (Schiller-Lübben).]

n.Cy.; meyl e.Yks. [mel.] 1. The last cut of corn in the harvest field. Cf. mell, sb.[1] 4.

Dur. When the last handful is bound up in the golden sheaf, and the sheaves are all placed upright in lots of ten or twelve each, locally called stooks, the farmer's head man, or some other elderly male person employed during harvest, proceeds with most stentorian voice to 'shout the mell,' which is celebrated in the following rhymes: 'Blest be the day that Christ was born, We've gettin't mell of Mr. ——'s corn; Weel bound and better shorn. Hip! Hip! Hip! Huzza! Huzza!' DENHAM Tracts (ed. 1895) II. 2. Cum.[1] This last cut is commonly platted, enclosing a large apple, and hung up in the farm kitchen till Christmas Day, when the corn is given to the best cow, and the apple to the oldest servant on the farm; Cum.[4] Yks. When carrying the last corn, the labourers and servants, by way of triumph cry 'mel, mel' (K.); DENHAM ib. n.Yks. Hearya, they've gitten t'mell to neet, they'r shooting (W.H.). ne.Yks.[1] We've gotten t'mell.

2. ? Obs. A contention for superiority on the last day of harvest.

n.Cy. The reapers, on the last day of their business, had a contention for superiority in quickness of dispatch, groups of three or four taking each a ridge, and striving which should soonest get to its termination. In the north of England this was called a mell, CHAMBERS Bk. Days (1869) II. 377.

3. The harvest-home supper.

4. Comp. (1) Mell-day, the last day of reaping; (2) -doll, the last handful of corn dressed like a doll or bound neatly together, and carried in triumph through the field; cf. kirn-baby; (3) -field, the field in which the last sheaf is cut; (4) -shaft or -sheaf, the last sheaf or sickleful of corn; (5) -shilling, an additional shilling given to each of the reapers instead of a harvest supper; (6) -supper, the harvest-home supper.

(1) n.Cy. This day is known throughout the north by the appellation of 'Mell Day.'. . An hour or two before the last and lucky cut the village musician is sent for to proceed with all haste to the harvest field, where he is expected to play some of his merriest tunes; to the sounds of which, at intervals, the shearers, binders, and their kind-hearted master, join in social dance, DENHAM ib. (2) n.Cy. A mell-doll, or image of corn, dressed like a doll, is carried, amid the joyful acclamations of the people on the last day of reaping. One of the verses of an old but vulgar song refers to the custom: 'Odzookers! Whom have we here now? Why, sure it a'nt Black Moll? Why, maam, you're of the fair sex, And welcome as mell-doll,' Fam. Churchman (Sept. 11, 1889) 124; N.Cy.[1] Nhb.[1] An image gaily dressed like a female child, and carried by a woman on a pole, in the midst of a group of reapers, as they go dancing and screaming to and from the fields on 'a shearing out day.' These parties generally consist of women; but after the day's work is done, the mell-doll . . . graces the board where the swains partake with their female partners in reaping in a plentiful meal, and the evening concludes with mirth, music, and dancing, HODGSON Nhb. pt. ii. II. 2. Nhb., Dur. (J.H.) Dur. My recollection of a mell doll is of a corn-sheaf stuck with flowers and wrapped in such of the reapers' garments as could be spared, HENDERSON Flk-Lore (1879) ii. Wm. (J.H.) Yks. HENDERSON Flk-Lore (1879) ii. (3) Dur., Yks. In the years 1825 and 1826 I saw the reapers coming home from the Mell Field in the evening, dressed in high-crowned muslin caps, profusely ornamented with ribbons of various colours, and preceded by music, DENHAM ib. 3. (4) n.Yks.[1] This was frequently made of such dimensions as to be a heavy load for a man, and, within a few years comparatively, was proposed as the prize to be won in a race of old women. In other cases it was carefully preserved, and set up in some conspicuous place in the farm-house; n.Yks.[4], ne.Yks.[1] m.Yks.[1] Left standing for the farmer himself to cut. (5) Dur., Yks. DENHAM ib. (6) n.Cy. GROSE (1790); BREWER (1870); N.Cy.[1], Nhb.[1] Dur. It's corn that folks dance and sing about when they're carrying the last load home—or may be you're thinking of the dance at the mell supper. MELVERLY, sb. Shr.[2] In phr. (1) get to Melverly wie thee, go where mischief may befall you; (2) Melverly God helps, the inhabitants of Melverly; (3) Melverly! where do you think? see below.

(1) From the circumstance of this village on the Welsh side of Shropshire being continually flooded by the irruptions of the Severn has originated the phr. of 'Get to Melverly wie thee.' (2) Its remoteness, perhaps, and the frequency of inundations to which it is subject, has occasioned the place to pass into a bye word, and its inhabitants to be called Melverly God helps. (3) After a dry summer, the Melverleians, whose land, which in itself is rich and productive, has been rendered more fertile by the bountiful watering of the adjacent river, retort upon their bantering neighbours, by the phrase of 'Melverly! where do you think?' A triumphant kind of exclamation, which signifies that such crops as those at Melverly could be obtained nowhere else.

[məˈrilz.] The game of 'Nine Men's Morris'; the figures used in the game of 'Nine Men's Morris.' Also in comp. Merril-peg.

Yks. Thirty years ago farm-servants . . . had a game called 'merrills,' in which a board with holes and pegs was used, N. & Q. (1890) 7th S. iv. 433. n.Yks.[14] e.Yks. Several more boys are about the place, playing at 'merrills,' or 'Jack steean,' NICHOLSON Flk-Sp. (1889) 10; e.Yks.[1] Played on a square board with 18 pegs, nine on each side. w.Yks. DYER Dial. (1891) 105; GOMME Games (1894) I. 413. Midl. Very generally played . . . under the name of Merrilpeg or Merelles. The twelve pieces I have never seen used, though I have often played with nine. We generally used marbles or draught pieces and not pegs, ib. 417. Nhp.[1] Played by two people, on a board, whereon are marked three squares, one within another at equal distances, and connected with each other by a line at each angle, drawn from the inner to the outer square, and again by lines in the middle of each side of the square, the area of which is denominated 'the pound.' At each intersection of the lines a spot or hole is made; as it is sometimes played with pegs, sometimes with bits of paper, or wood, or stone, according to the resources of the players. . . Each of the players has nine pieces or men, differing in colour or material from his adversary's, which they lay down on the spots alternately, one by one, each endeavouring to prevent his opponent from placing three of his pieces in a line, as whichever does so is entitled to take off any one of his antagonist's men where he pleases, without breaking a row of three, which must not be done whilst there is another man on the board. After all the pieces are placed on the board, they are moved alternately backwards or forwards along the lines; and, as often as either of the players succeeds in accomplishing a row of three, he claims one of his antagonist's men, which is placed in the pound, and he who takes the most pieces wins the game. This amusement was formerly the pastime of the shepherds while tending their flocks in the open fields. War. GOMME ib. 417. Cmb. N. & Q. (1867) 3rd S. xii. 254.

Hence (1) Merril-board, sb. a board upon which the game of 'merrils' is played; (2) -pound, sb. the 'pound' used in the game of 'merrils.'

Go, call to me, my merry men all, SHARPE Ballad Bk. (1823) 14, ed. 1868. (13) Sc. The following account [is a] description of the mode in some parts of the country:—A sport of female children, in which they form a ring, dancing round in it while they hold each other by the hands and singing as they move. In the progress of the play, they by the motion of their hands imitate the whole process of the laundry, in washing, starching, drying, and ironing (JAM.); Another form of this game is only a kind of dance in which the girls first join hands in a circle and sing while moving round, .. 'Here we go round the mulberry-bush, .. And round the merry-ma-tanzie.' .. They then begin, with skirts held daintily up behind, to walk singly along singing, 'This is the way the ladies walk,' &c., after which they perhaps simulate the walk of gentlemen. .. They then represent ironing clothes, baking bread, washing the house, and a number of other familiar proceedings, CHAMBERS Pop. Rhymes (1870) 134. Cai.[1] Inv. Here we go with merry shout, Up and down and round about, And dance a merry-ma-tandy, STEWART Ben Nevis, 361, in GOMME Games (1894) I. 376. Fif. Girls chose the quieter sports—merry-my-tanzie, jing-a-ring, COLVILLE Vernacular (1899) 13. s.Sc. A game among children, generally girls, common throughout the lowlands. They form a ring, within which one goes round with a handkerchief with which a stroke is given in succession to every one in the ring; the person who strikes, or the 'taker,' still repeating this rhyme:—'Here I gae round the jingie ring, The jingie ring, the jingie ring, Here I gae round the jingie ring And through my merry-metanzie.' Then the handkerchief is thrown at one in the ring, who is obliged to take it up and go through the same process (JAM.). Rnf. The following is a fragment of this little ballet as practised at Kilbarchan: 'She synes the dishes three times a day, Three times a day, three times a day, She synes the dishes three times a day, Come alang wi' the merry-ma-tanzie,' CHAMBERS ib. 135. Ayr. The wee lassocks have made a ring on the causey and are singing 'Roon aboot merry-ma-tanzie,' SERVICE Notandums (1890) 75; When at jing-ga-ring, buttons, the bat or the ba', .. Or Mary-ma-tanzie, LAING Poems (1894) 11. Lnk. A number of girls join hands in a circle round one of their number, who acts as a kind of mistress of the ceremonies. The circle moves slowly round the central lady . . . singing to a pleasing air: 'Here we go the jingo ring, The jingo ring, the jingo ring, Here we go the jingo ring About the merry-ma-tanzie.' At the end of the first line of the next verse they courtesy to the girl in the inside, who returns the compliment. .. The lady of the ring then selects a girl from the circle, of whom she asks her sweetheart's name, which is imparted in a whisper; upon which she sings to those in the circle (they dancing as before): 'Guess ye wha's the young good-man.' . . Those in the circle reply by some approving or depreciating words, .. such as 'Honey is sweet and so is he,' .. or 'Apples are sour and so is he.' .. The marriage, however, is finally concluded upon and effected. .. 'He's married wi' a gay gold ring.' .. At the end of the first line of the next verse, all go for a moment separate, and each performs a pirouette, clapping her hands above her head, CHAMBERS ib. 132; At Biggar this game was generally played on the green by boys and girls. A ring is formed by all the children but one joining hands. The one child stands in the centre. The ring of children dance round the way of the sun, first slowly and then more rapidly. First all the children in the ring bow to the one in the centre and she bows back. Then they dance round singing the first and second verses, the second verse being addressed to the child in the centre ['Come, name the lad you like the best,' &c.]. She then whispers a boy's name to one in the ring. This girl then sings the third verse ['Guess ye wha's the young guidman,' &c.]. None in the ring are supposed to be able to answer, and the name of the chosen boy is then said aloud by the girl who asked the question. If the name is satisfactory the ring sing the fourth verse ['Honey's sweet and so is he,' &c.], and the two players then retire and walk round a little. If the name given is not satisfactory the ring sing the fifth verse [' Crab-apples are sour and so is he,' &c.] and another child must be chosen. When the two again stand in the centre the boys sing the sixth verse [' Can she bake and can she brew ? ' &c.]. The girls answer with the seventh [' She can bake and she can brew,' &c.]. Then all sing the next verses, imitating washing clothes, wringing, ironing, baking bread, washing hands, combing hair, &c. . . The boy who was chosen then presents a ring, usually a blade of grass wrapped round her finger, to the girl. . . When all have chosen, if any lad is left without a partner, the last verse is sung [' Here's a silly auld man left alone, Left alone, left alone, He wants a wife and can't get none, About the merry-ma-tansa '], Gomme ib. 373. Edb. Chambers ib. 131. The reason probably was that by the time a new pit was wanted the old one had become filled with water and could not be again worked; but the same seam of marl was worked as near the old pit as possible, the mid-feather being left to dam the water out of the new pit. Also a turf-getting term. In former times there was no drainage from the peat bogs; and when a turf-getter in digging out turf got to the bottom of a hole the water filtered in upon his work and stopped him. He, therefore, left a mid-feather of solid turf between the hole he was digging and the previous hole, and baled the water over it, whilst he got the bottom 'lift' of the turf out; Chs.[2,3], s.Chs.[1] (b) w.Yks. (T.H.H.), e.Lan.[1], Chs.[1] (c) Chs.[1] (d) w.Yks. (J.J.B.), w.Yks.[12] (e) w.Yks.[1] (6) Sh.I. 'Shū . . . trivl'd his airm up efter, wi' her mid finger—' 'Why wi' her mid fing'r, daa?' By this term was meant the effort to move the stone forward by an upward lift of the handle end of the crowbar, . . just the reverse of a prise, N. & Q. (1871) 4th S. viii. 305. n.Cy. The grinding surfaces of mill-stones require to be re-dressed from time to time. To do this the upper stone is raised until it stands on its edge, the lower end of the iron bar, or gavelock, . . resting on the fixed nether millstone as a fulcrum, while an upward motion is given to the hand at the higher end; a downward motion being inapplicable in this case. In a 'miller's lift' the gavelock acts as a lever of the second order; in a prise it is a lever of the first order, ib. (6) Wil. A millardy-mollard, a ten o'clock scholard, What makes you come so soon? (K.M.G.) (7) Dor. He saw one of those great white miller's souls, as we call 'em—that is to say a miller-moth—come from William's open mouth, HARDY Life's Iron. (ed. 1896) 253. 2. Phr. (1) to be behindhand like the miller's filler, to be dilatory in keeping appointments; (2) to put out the miller's eye, to add too much water or milk to any mixture; cf. drown, 4.

(1) Nhp.[1] (2) Nhp.[1] Most frequently applied to weak tea, or any spirituous mixture; also to an exuberance of milk in making a pudding. This peculiar phrase has no reference to the eye of a miller, but probably to that part of the machinery of a mill termed the mill-eye. . . If, through the inattention of the miller, the grain flows too freely into the hopper, and thence fills the eye or aperture of the revolving stone, and brings the machine to a stand, the mill-eye is stopped or put out. War.[3] Hnt. (T.P.F.) Ess. That day, they had a toad-in-hole, A dish that's deadly gud. But when oad Styles to goffle it Bargun, he soon ded cry out:—'Missus, I thinks as how, taa-day, You've put the meller's eye out,' Clark J. Noakes (1839) st. 67–8; Ess.[1] Ken.[1] When a person, in mixing mortar or dough, pours too much water into the hole made to receive it; then they say, 'I reckon you've put the miller's eye out now!'

5. A hairy caterpillar, esp. the caterpillar of the tiger-moth; the larva of the Vanessa urticae.

Shr. Another amulet in recent use around Market Drayton is composed of a 'miller,' or hairy caterpillar, enclosed in the shell of a hazel-nut, from which the kernel has been withdrawn through a hole bored in the side. The nutshell and caterpillar are then sewn up in a cotton band and tied round the sufferer's neck. If the cough does not disappear under this treatment, the 'miller' must be taken out of the nut and replaced by a living spider, Burne Flk-Lore (1883–6) 194; Shr.[12]

MILPREV(E, sb. Cor. A stone used as a charm against adders, see below.

Around the Land's End . . . in the summer-time, it was not safe to venture amongst the furze on the Downs without a milpreve. . . Described . . . as being about the size of a pigeon's egg, . . made by the adders when they get together in great numbers. . . I was once shown a milpreve; it was nothing more than a beautiful ball of coralline lime-stone, the sections of the coral being thought to be entangled young snakes. . . The Cornish retain variety of charms, and have still towards the Land's End the amulets of Maen Magal and Glain-neider, which latter they call a Melprer [sic], a thousand worms, and have a charm for the snake to make it, when they have found one asleep, and struck a hazel-wand in the centre of its spirae, Hunt Pop. Rom. w.Eng. (1865) 418, ed. 1896; The farmer called it a 'milpreene' [sic] or serpent stone, which, when required, was boiled in milk and the milk afterwards administered as an antidote for bites of vipers. The account he gave of the formation of the stone was that a number of adders congregated together at times, and their spittle hardened upon a hazel rod or the tail of one of their number, N. & Q. (1880) 6th S. i. 23; Cor.[1] A coralline ball worn as a charm against adders; Cor.[2] The Druids' or serpents' egg.

[OCor. milprev, the Druid's or serpent's egg. The ovum anguinum of Pliny. Mil, a thousand + prēv, a reptile (Williams).]

(1) Cld. (Jam.) (2) Sh.I. It is called the milt-token, and is said to have been practised in some parts of Shetland. When the first mert was killed about Hallowmas, the milt or spleen of the animal was taken out and laid on a board, and six cuts were made crosswise, equi-distant from each other. These cuts were not quite through the milt, the under side being left whole. They were named—the first, November; the second, December; .. and so on to April. The milt was now laid in a dark place for three days and three nights. It was then carefully examined, and if a cut had closed and presented a dry appearance, the month it represented was to be mild and dry; but if the cut was open and dry the month was supposed to be windy. An open and wet cut foretold wind and rain, Spence Flk-Lore (1899) 117–8.

MISK, sb.[2] Obs. Sc. [misk.] A low, wet, untilled piece of land.

Cld. Land covered with coarse rough moorish grasses (JAM.). Ayr. The misk is usually the property of neighbouring lairds or feuars. One vassal can, in terms of his title-deeds, pare off the peats only; another is confined to the surface product—the boghay, &c., as winter fodder, or to the right of pasture under fixed limitations. Indeed the rights of the misk were always clearly defined in the 'tacks' of the adjoining lands. For example in 1732, Marie Buntine set or granted 'a tack of hir land, .. reserving out the tack the six Falls of Wet Misk' (ib.); A low swampy valley called the Misk, intervenes between the hills and the more fertile lands in the parish of Stevenstoun, ROBERTSON Hist. Cuninghame (ib.).

Hence Misk-grass, sb. grass growing upon wet, untilled land. Ayr. (JAM.)

LYTTLE Ballycuddy (1892) 34.

2. To preside in a congregation at the election of a pastor; also in phr. to moderate (in) a call, see below.

Sc. The Minister ordered to moderate at the election, STEUART Coll. (1700) bk. i. tit. 1 (JAM.); It is the Presbytery that moderates in a 'call' from the congregation to the person elected. The Presbytery meets for public worship with the congregation: a form of call is produced which the members of the congregation sign. If signed by the majority of members and no objections are made, the Presbytery 'sustains' it, and thereafter in due time and order proceed to ordination, or to induction. The Moderator of the Presbytery acts as its mouthpiece (A.W.). w.Sc. I must go over and see him one of these days, before his call is moderated in, MACDONALD Settlement (1869) 69, ed. 1877. Per. When do Mr. Sangster and the Session intend to moderate the call and get him ordained and settled among you? CLELAND Inchbracken (1883) 41, ed. 1887.

Hence Moderation, sb. the act of presiding in a congregation at the election of a pastor; also in phr. moderation of a call.

Sc. When a minister is appointed to preside in this business, it is said that the Presbytery grant a moderation to the people (JAM.). Fif. When a congregation has elected a minister, the Presbytery meets, and a form of call is produced which is signed by the members of the congregation. If there are no objections, and the call is signed by a majority, the Presbytery sustains the call, and takes steps for the ordination or the induction of the person elected and called. This is what is meant by moderation of a call (A.W.); The provost and minister gabbled about presbyteries and synods, the moderation of calls, elders, deacons, GRANT Six Hundred, v.

Lon., Sur. A game played with a ball. There are seven players, who each take a name from one of the days of the week. One (Sunday) begins by throwing the ball against a wall, calling out at the same time the name of one of the days, who has to run and catch it before it falls. If this one fails to catch the ball, the first player picks up the ball and tries to hit one of the six with it, who all endeavour to escape being hit. If the player succeeds, he again throws the ball against the wall, calling out another day of the week to catch it. If a player gets hit three times, he is out. The winner is he who has either not been hit at all or the fewest times, or who has been able to stay in the longest, GOMME Games (1894) I. 389.

MOOR, v.[2] Yks. [mūr, moə(r.)] With up: to smother, 'smoor,' cover up; to crowd to suffocation; also fig. to impede, hamper.

n.Yks. T'machine spout was moor'd up wi cooarn (I.W.); n.Yks.[12] m.Yks.[1] Moor thyself up well; it's a cold evening. w.Yks.[5] Tha'll moor that barn up wal shoo can't brēathe! 'Moor'd up reight here, hahivver!' (middle one of five in a bed loquitur).

MOOR, v.[3] Yks. Lan. Of cattle: to be afflicted with a disease in which the water is mixed with blood.

w.Yks. Watson Hist. Hlfx. (1775) 543; Dyer Dial. (1891) 77; w.Yks.[1] When cattle are inflicted with a disease which occasions bloody urine, they are said to be moored. This term may be derived from the strong resemblance the bloody urine may have to the dark water flowing from the moorish earth. . . A sudden removal from a limestone to a grit soil, and vice versa, will frequently occasion it. Some attribute it to coarse grass in marshy grounds, interspersed with alder and underwood; w.Yks.[4], ne.Lan.[1]

Midl. N. & Q. (1851) 1st S. iv. 190. Lin. An immense number of country servants attended the 'Mop' on Friday last, Stamford Merc. (May 24, 1878). Lei.[1] A yearly assemblage held a month after the ordinary Statutes, in order to give a second chance to masters and servants, who after a month's trial put an end to their contract. Nhp.[1] A yearly assemblage, after Michaelmas, . . of those servants who remain unhired from the statutes which are held before Michaelmas. It is also made an occasion for a holiday, by servants, before entering upon their new duties; Nhp.[2] War. The ancient mop fair at Stratford-on-Avon yesterday was attended by thousands of persons. . . This fair has been in existence several hundred years, and was originally a statute fair for the hiring of servants, agricultural and domestic. Of late years it has become little more than a huge pleasure gathering, but a little hiring is still done. Contracts made at the mop fair are legally binding for twelve months. Six oxen and fourteen pigs were roasted whole on spits at fire-places erected in the streets, Dy. Mail (Oct. 13, 1898); That time-honoured, if unruly, institution, Kings Norton Mop, is evidently to die hard, *B'ham Dy. The word 'mop' is derived from an old custom which ordained that the maid-servants who came to find situations should bring their badge of office with them to the fair. They came with their brooms and mops, Gibbs Cotswold Vill. (1898) 287; Glo.[1] There are three mops in Gloucester held on the three Mondays after 'Barton Fair,' the 28th Sept. The third is called the 'runaway' mop, because the men and girls who were hired at the previous mops come to be hired again. A shilling is paid when the bargain is struck, and the engagement is for twelve months. The men and girls are called 'Johnnies and Mollies.' Oxf. The first of the Michaelmas hiring fairs, or 'mops,' as they are familiarly called, was held on Wednesday [at Chipping Norton]. The 'mop' has developed into a pleasure fair. Wednesday's fixture was little more than a village fair, Oxf. Chron. (Oct. 10, 1899); The first mop or statute fair was held on Saturday [at Burford], Oxf. Times (Oct. 17, 1896). Brks.[1], Hnt. 1. sb. A country dance; see below. Gen. in comp. Morris-dance.

Dmf. Never glisk o' faery face, Nor morrice dance, nor witchin' spell, REID Poems (1894) 57. w.Yks.[2] Lan.[1] My new shoon they are so good, I could dance Morris if I would; And if hat and sark be drest, I will dance Morris with the best, BAMFORD Early Days (1849). Der.[1], nw.Der.[1] Lei.[1] On Plough Monday it was the custom for some of the villagers to dress in grotesque masquerade and perform morris-dances before all the houses where they were likely to get money or drink (s.v. Plough-bullocks). Nhp.[1] Still continued, in some parts of the country, as a Whitsuntide amusement, when different parties go from village to village, performing their various evolutions. A set consists of six or eight young men, one of whom generally represents Maid Marian, or Molly, as she is now degenerately called; another personates the clown, or fool; and the remainder are without their coats and waistcoats, and with the cleanest and best shirts they can procure, gaily bedizened with pendant ribbons and rosettes of various colours . . . The fool is variously, but always grotesquely, attired, sometimes with a cow's tail at his back, sometimes covered with skins; and, in the neighbourhood of Brackley, he is called the squire or fool, and has a gridiron and fish drawn on his back. He always carries the usual badge in his hand, an inflated bladder with beans, fastened to a staff about two feet long, or a bladder is attached to one end of a short stick, and a calf's tail at the other. He rattles and beats the bladder about to clear the way for their performance, or plays tricks for the amusement of the company; Molly carries a ladle in her hand, with which she solicits money from the spectators. The dance consists of a variety of manœuvres, rapid changing of postures, striking first the toe, then the heel on the ground, which occasions great jingling of the bells; repeatedly clapping their hands, then their knees, and each other's hands. They sometimes dance with sticks, flourishing and brandishing them about; then placing them on the ground, with the points all meeting in the centre, they dance round them in a circle. This is called Bedlam Morris; Nhp.[2] The morris dance is performed by six or eight young men, gaily decked out with ribbons, buttons, &c., and with a great number of little bells attached to their legs; each carries in his hands a strong round stick, of about a yard in length. The dance . . . consists of a series of rapid evolutions, changes of posture, &c., accompanied with brandishing and clashing of the staves and flourishing of kerchiefs. The clown or Tom Fool has generally an old quilt thrown over him, plentifully hung with rabbit-skins; his cap is ornamented with a feather, and in his hand he holds a stick with an inflated bladder attached to the end by a cord. This, together with the piper, completes the set. War.[3], se.Wor.[1] Glo. Hed a morris-dance in the market-pleace, GIBBS Cotswold Vill. (1898) 91. Oxf. (G.O.)

Hence (1) Morris-bell, sb. a small bell worn by those who take part in the morris-dance; (2) -dancer, (a) one who takes part in the morris-dance; (b) the Aurora Borealis; (3) -dancing, sb. the performance of the morris-dance.

(1) Hrt. Tie a morrice bell about the neck of a rat, ELLIS Mod. Husb. (1750) IV. i. 185. (2, a) w.Yks.[2] Fifty years ago and later morris-dancers used to assemble in great numbers on 'The Cross' at Cold Aston. They were decorated with a great profusion of gaudy ribbons. Chs.[1] It is a pretty sight to see the dancers, fantastically dressed with gay ribbons hanging from their arms and legs, dancing in a sort of procession, with the cracking of carters' whips, and to a quaint tune the notes of which I have not been able to pick up. . . Some fifteen or sixteen years ago I saw these Morris Dancers parading through Stockport to a very peculiar tune played on fifes, which had quite a traditional ring about it. Wil. Men dressed up; some in white shirts and others as women, who come round dancing at Whitsuntide (L.C.M.). Lin.[1] Plough-boys who dress themselves fantastically on Plough-Monday. Nhp.[1] The set of morris dancers attendant at the Whitsun Ale often consisted of six couple. . . They were dressed in scarfs or belts of broad ribbon, one over each shoulder, crossing in the centre, ornamented with bunches of blue and red ribbons, or blue and orange; five rosettes were placed on the scarf before, and five behind, with one on each hip. Their hats were also decorated with rosettes and streamers of the same coloured ribbons. On their legs they often had as many as six rows of bells, six in a row, of different sizes graduating from the knee to the ankle. They were attended by a fool, but a piper was substituted for Molly, who had a whistling pipe in his mouth, and a tambourine-drum suspended from his wrist or elbow, upon which he played with a stick. They danced chiefly on their toes with a spring, all keeping time together, and flourishing either handkerchiefs or sticks in their hands. War.[3] Chimney-sweeps used to dress as morris-dancers in Birmingham, and dance in the streets on May-day, levying toll on passers-by, certainly later than 1855, but the custom led to abuses and was suppressed by the police. se.Wor.[1] In the neighbourhood of Pershore the morris-dancers go out for about ten days at Christmas-tide, accompanied by their musician and a 'tom-fool.' The 'tom-fool' carries in one hand a bladder tied to a stick, and in the other a kind of wooden spoon or bowl, in which he collects the contributions of the spectators. In addition to this duty, he is supposed to amuse the bystanders with funny sayings and antics. . . He also runs after the boys and (if he can catch them) strikes them with his bladder. Besides being ornamented with ribbons rather more fantastically than the dancers, the fool carries a small bell concealed somewhere about his person, which keeps up a constant tinkling. Sometimes also his face is painted after the fashion of the ordinary stage clown. The morris-dancers go through certain figures, country dances, 'the figure of eight,' &c., and at certain parts of the tune stand face to face and mark the time with short sticks—one of which each man carries in his right hand—striking them together with a pleasant and not unmusical sound. In some of the dances each man carries, instead of the stick, a large coloured handkerchief, which at given parts of the tune he swings over his shoulder; and this action being performed simultaneously by all the dancers, the effect is picturesque and pretty. Oxf. On Whit Monday, 1899, the Headington morris-dancers performed in the streets of Oxford (G.O.). (b) Or.I. The North-Light . . . is by reason of its desultory motion called Morrice-Dancers, Merry Dancers, and Streamers, WALLACE Desc. Or. I. (1693) 156, ed. 1883. (3) Chs.[1] At Cheadle Wakes the ancient morris-dancing is still one of the attractions. In former times there was also morris-dancing at Wilmslow at the rush-bearing.

2. The game of Nine Men's Morris (q.v.). Cf. merrils.

Nhp.[1] A game played by two people on a board, whereon are marked three squares, one within another at equal distances, and connected with each other by a line at each angle drawn from the inner to the outer square and again by lines in the middle of each side of the square, the area of which is denominated 'the pound.' At each intersection of the lines a spot or hole is made; as it is sometimes played with pegs, sometimes with bits of paper or wood or stone (s.v. Merills). e.An.[1] Shepherd's boys and other clowns play it on the green turf, or on the bare ground; cutting or scratching the lines, on the one or the other. . . In towns, porters and other labourers play it, at their leisure hours, on the flat pavement, tracing the figure with chalk. . . The figure is to be found on the back of some draught-boards. . . On the ground, the men are pebbles, broken tiles, shells, or potsherds; on a table, the same as are used at draughts or backgammon. Nrf. N. & Q. (1867) 3rd S. xii. 254. e.Suf. (F.H.)

(1) Shr.[1] Peculiar to this mere [Colemere] . . . are the green moss-balls, and brown balls composed of fir leaves. It is supposed that the bottom of the mere is troubled with conflicting eddies and currents, caused no doubt by springs, and that these currents catch up the fir leaves that fall from the trees on the south side of the mere, and roll them up, together with particles of confervae, into balls of different sizes, even up to two feet in diameter. The moss-balls are composed entirely of confervae. The currents convey these balls to the opposite side of the mere, and there they may be found in thousands at a depth of three or four feet. The cohesion of each ball is perfect, Mountain, Meadow, and Mere (ed. 1873) 21. (2) n.Yks.[12]

It consists, in the game of 'Pinch,' of some small object, generally a copper placed upon the head of a nail, or piece of wood, fixed in the ground. Where there is no nail or wood come-at-able, in the game of quoits, a piece of white pot is sought for, and sunk flat into the ground till it is even with the surface, and this is their 'mot.' ne.Lan.[1], e.Lan.[1] m.Lan.[1] Generally a bit o' papper stuck i' th' clay. Chs.[13], s.Chs.[1] Der. GROSE (1790) MS. add. (P.); Der.[12], nw.Der.[1] Not. On the mot (J.H.B.). Lin. BROOKES Tracts Gl. n.Lin.[1], Nhp.[1], War. (J.R.W.), War.[123], s.Wor.[1], se.Wor.[1], Shr.[12], ne.Ken. (H.M.)

2. A game played with white stones; ? 'duckstones.' War.[13] 3. A colliery term: the badge, gen. of metal, which a miner puts on his corve to identify it as his.

w.Yks. He never touched the motty but his brother did, Yks. Wkly. Post (Dec. 16, 1896); At top on it stands a corf filled we coils, picks, shuvals and motties, TOM TREDDLEHOYLE Trip to Lunnon (1851) 25; w.Yks.[2] Pieces of wood cut with notches. Lan. When a coal-heaver has filled a corve, he places his motty on the load, and the truck having reached the pit bottom, the number of the motty is taken, and the coal with which the corve is loaded is placed to the miner's credit, NORTHALL Gl. (1896).

Hence Mottying, vbl. sb. the practice of removing a miner's 'motty' from his corve, and affixing another.

One of them, very frequently all the children, ask her the first question, and the Mother answers. When she gives permission for the children to go out they all curtsey three times, and run off and pretend to play. They then return, and the rest of the dialogue [s.u. the different counties] is said, the Mother asking the questions and the children replying. At the end of the dialogue the Mother chases and catches them, one after the other, pretending to beat and punish them, GOMME Games (1894) I. 395.] w.Yks. 'Grandmother, grandmother grey, May I go out to play? No, my child, it's such a wet day. Look how the sun shines, mother. Well, make three round curtseys and be off away.' [Child goes, returns, knocks at door. Mother says, 'Come in.'] 'What have you been doing all this time? Brushing Jenny's hair and combing Jenny's hair. What did her mother give you for your trouble? A silver penny. Where's my share of it? Cat ran away with it. Where's the cat? In the wood. Where's the wood? Fire burnt it. Where's the fire? Moo-cow drank it. Where's the moo-cow? Butcher killed it. Where's the butcher? Eating nuts behind the door, and you may have the nut-shells.' . . Only two children are mentioned as playing. When the Mother is chasing the girl, she keeps asking, 'Where's my share of the silver penny?' to which the girl replies, 'You may have the nut-shells,' ib. 390–1, 395. Nrf. 'Please, mother, may I go a-maying? Ran up the wood. Where is the wood? Fire burnt it. Where is the fire? Water quenched it. Where is the water? Ducks have drunk it. Where are the ducks? Butcher killed them. Where is the butcher? Behind the churchyard, cracking nuts, and leaving you the shells,' ib. 391. Sus. 'Pray, mother, pray, May I go out to play? No, daughter, no, daughter, Not every fine day. Why, mother, why? I shan't be gone long. Make a fine curtsey, And glad git you gone.—Wait for your sister.' In the . . . Hurstmonceux game there appears to be no chasing, ib. 395. Dor. 'Please may I go out to play? How long will you stay? Three hours in a day. Will you come when I call you? No. Will you come when I fetch you? Yes. Make then your curtseys and be off.' The girls then scamper off . . . and as they run about the field keep calling out, 'I won't go home till seven o'clock.' . . The Mother calls Alice (or whatever the name may be) to come home, when the one addressed will run all the faster, crying louder than before, 'I won't go home till seven o'clock.' Then the Mother commences to chase them until she catches them, and when she gets them to any particular place in the field where the others are playing, she says—'Where have you been? Up to grandmother's. What have you done that you have been away so long? I have cleaned the grate and dusted the room. What did she give you? A piece of bread and cheese as big as a house, and a piece of plum-cake so big as a mouse. Where's my share? Up in higher cupboard. It's not there. Up in lower cupboard. It's not there. Then the cat have eat it.' [The remainder of the dialogue is similar to the Lon. version], ib. 393-4. Cor. 'Mother, mother, may I (or we) go out to play? No, child! no, child! not for the day. Why, mother? why, mother? I won't stay long. Make three pretty courtesies, and away begone. One for mammy, one for daddy, one for Uncle John. Where, child! where, child! have you been all the day? Up to granny's. What have you been doing there?' [The answer to this is often, 'Washing doll's clothes,' but anything may be mentioned.] 'What did she give you?' [The reply is again left to the child's fancy.] 'Where's my share? The cat ate it. What's in the box, mother? Twopence, my child. What for, mother? To buy a stick to beat you, and a rope to hang you, my child,' Flk-Lore Jrn V. 55–6; When the mother has caught one of the children, she beats her and puts her hands round the child's throat as if she were going to hang her, GOMME ib. 396. (4) Der. A number of girls choose one of their number to represent a witch, and another to be a mother. The Witch stands near the corner of a wall so that she can peep round. Then the Mother counts the children by the seven days of the week, . . and appoints another girl to act as guardian over them. She then pretends to go out washing. . . As soon as the Mother has gone, the old Witch comes and says, 'Please can I light my pipe?' Then the children say, 'Yes, if you won't spit on t' hearth.' She pretends to light her pipe, but spits on the hearth, and runs away with the girl called Sunday. Then the Guardian . . . pretends to rush downstairs, and . . . calls out, 'Mother, mother, t'pot boils over.' The Mother replies, 'Put your head in'; the Guardian says, 'It's all over hairs'; the Mother says, 'Put the dish-clout in'; the Guardian says, 'It's greasy'; the Mother says, 'Get a fork'; the Guardian says, 'It's rusty'; the Mother says, 'I'll come mysen.' She comes and begins to count the children . . . and missing Sunday, asks 'Where's Sunday?' The Guardian says, 'T'old Witch has fetched her.' The Mother answers, 'Where was you?' 'Upstairs.' The Mother says, 'What doing? Making t'beds. Why didn't you come down? Because I had no shoes. Why didn't you borrow a pair? Because nobody would lend me a pair? Why didn't you steal a pair? Do you want me to get hung?' Then the Mother runs after her, and if she can catch her thrashes her for letting Sunday go. Then the Mother pretends to go out washing again, and the Witch fetches the other days of the week one by one, when the same dialogue is rehearsed, Gomme ib. 396-7. Lon. [The game begins in the same way as in Der.] The Witch . . . catches hold of Monday and runs off with her; and at this moment the pot boils over. The child who is the pot makes a 'hissing and fizzing' noise. The daughter calls out—'Mother, mother, the pot boils over. Take the spoon and skim it. Can't find it. Look on the shelf. Can't reach it. Take the stool. The leg's broke. Take the chair. Chair's gone to be mended. I suppose I must come myself?' The Mother here wrings her hands out of the water in the washing-tub and comes in. She looks about and misses Monday. 'Where's Monday? Oh, please, mother, please, I couldn't help it; but some one came to beg a light for her pipe, and when I went for it she took Monday off. Why that's the Witch.' The Mother pretends to beat the eldest daughter, tells her to be more careful another time, and to be sure and not let the pot boil over. The eldest daughter cries, and promises to be more careful . . . The same thing occurs again. The Witch comes and asks—'Please, will you lend me your tinder-box?' . . While the tinder-box is being looked for she runs off with Tuesday. Then the pot boils over, and the same dialogue is repeated. . . This is repeated for all the seven children in turn, different articles, gridiron, poker, &c., being borrowed each time. Finally, the eldest daughter is taken off too. There is no one now to watch the pot, so it boils over, and makes so much noise that the Mother hears it and comes to see why it is. . . She goes after her children. A dialogue ensues between the Witch and the Mother. . . 'Is this the way to the Witch's house? There's a red bull that way! I'll go this way. There's a mad cow that way.' . . She then insists on entering the house to look for her children. The Witch will not admit her, and says—'Your boots are too dirty. I'll take my boots off. Your stockings are too dirty. I'll take them off. Your feet are dirty. I'll cut them off. The blood will run over the threshold. I'll wrap them up in a blanket. The blood will run through.' This enrages the Mother, and she pushes her way into the . . . house and looks about, and calls her children. She goes to one and says—'This tastes like my Monday.' The Witch tells her it's a barrel of pork. 'No, no, this is my Monday; run away home.' Upon this Monday jumps up . . . and runs off, followed by all the others and their Mother. The Witch tries to catch one, and if successful that child becomes Witch next time, ib. 397-400. (5) Sh.I. Dey wir monie a güde muckle midder o' a ling taen 'uto him, *Sh. 2. The service for the churching of women.

Sus.[1] It is considered most unlucky for a woman after giving birth to a child to cross the high-road, or to pay a visit before she has been to church to return thanks. . .'If a man be the first that a woman meets after she comes out of the Church, when she is newly churched, it signifies that her next child will be a boy; if she meets a woman, then a wench is likely to be her next child.'

Hence Mothering-pew, sb. the pew reserved for women who desire to be churched.

An elderly maiden lady once found her way by accident into the mothering pew in a strange church, and joined devoutly in the service, which included that appointed for the churching of women, but did not discover that she had herself been churched till the clerk handed her the alms-dish for her offering, ib.

3. v. In comb. (1) Mount-the-Kitty or Mounty Kitty, a boys' game, see below; (2) -the-tin, a game, see below.

(1) Nhb. Sides are taken (3 or 4 on a side). If three play on a side, those who are in 'make backs' in a line. Then the first boy of the off side (in leap frog style) must leap clean over to the furthest boy's back, the second to next, and the third mounting in the rear calls out 'Mount the kitty one, two, three.' All may then step off. If a boy's foot touches the ground whilst this is being done the sides change (R.O.H.); Nhb.[1] Lakel.[2] Mounty kitty, mounty kitty, yan, tweea, three. (2) Cth. One child throws a tin to some distance, and then walks towards it without looking round. The other children, in the meantime, hide somewhere near. The child who threw the tin has to guard it, and at the same time try to find those who are hiding. If he sees one he must call the name, and run to strike the tin with his foot. He does this until each one has been discovered. As they are seen they must stand out. The one who was first found has to guard the tin next time. Should one of the players be able to strike the tin while the keeper is absent, that player calls out, 'Hide again.' They can then all hide until the same keeper discovers them again, GOMME Games (1894) I. 401.

4. To arrange, fix; to equip, furnish; to trim, dress up.

MUN, pron. Som. Dev. Cor. Also in forms men Dev.[1] Cor.; min Dev.[2] [mən, min.] 1. Them.

nw.Som., n.Dev. Mun is the commonest form of 'them' in North Devon, and the Exmoor district of Somerset, but it is never emphasized. When emphasis is required, it is laid on the preposition or verb. Tu mun, vraum mun, ěen mun, paun mun, oa mun, wai mun, gee mun [to, from, in, on, of, with, give them], Elworthy Gram. (1877) 37; The common objective pl. There can be no doubt but that in the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries it came about that to 'hym,' representing both the accusative singular and plural, the terminal inflection 'en' was added in the plural to mark the difference. Hence we have 'hymen' occurring in the poem of Sir Ferumbras over a hundred times. Subsequently the 'hy' was dropped and the modern 'men' remained. This subject is treated at length in the Transactions of the Devon Association, 1881, p. 324, et sq. Where dids' zee mun? Take and car mun up in the tallet, ib. Wd. Bk. (1888). Dev. MUNSHETS, sb. w.Yks.[2] Also written munshits. [mu·nʃits.] A boys' game; see below.

It is played by two boys in the following manner:—One of the boys remains 'at home' and the other goes out to a prescribed distance. The boy who remains 'at home' makes a small hole in the ground, and holds in his hand a stick about three feet long to strike with. The boy who is out at field throws a stick in the direction of this hole, at which the other strikes. If he hits it he has to run to a prescribed mark and back to the hole without being caught or touched with the smaller stick by his playfellow. If he is caught he is 'out' and has to go to field. And if the boy at field can throw his stick so near to the hole as to be within the length or measure of that stick, the boy at home has to go out to field. A number of boys often play together; for any even number can play. . . In principle [the game] resembles cricket, and looks like the rude beginning of that game.

MUNTLE, sb. Wor. Shr. Glo. Also written muntel. [mʉ·ntl.] A Severn salmon-fishing term: one of the lines attached to the net; see below.

Glo.[1] The debut line is the name of the first line thrown out of the boat to a man on the bank, as the boat is pulled across the river, casting out the net all the way. When the boat reaches the opposite bank, the line attached to the other end of the net is thrown from the boat to a man on the top of the bank called a muntleman, this line being called the muntle.

Hence Muntleman, sb. the man to whom the 'muntle' is thrown.

Wor., Shr., Glo. N. & Q. (1879) 5th S. xi. 126; Glo.[1] The muntleman drags the net till he comes to the landing-place or float; he then throws the line into the river, and the next line the belche is used immediately to pull the net over to the place of landing, and by this process shuts up the mouth of the net, and encloses any fish swimming within the bag of the net as it floats down stream.
